Northern Introduces Hall: A Norwegian Design Icon

Hall is a small lamp with a monumental address. Designed by Birger Dahl in 1955, it has graced the façades of Oslo City Hall, Elverum Town Hall and other public buildings across Norway for decades, quietly illuminating some of the country's most iconic architecture, season after season. Now, for the first time, Northern brings this outdoor design classic back to life.

The lamp's signature is instantly recognisable: a mouth-blown opal glass shade divided by a slender metal band, held outward from the wall on a compact cast arm. It is a form that is at once functional and quietly expressive, pure Birger Dahl. Hall is built for the elements and performs equally well indoors and outdoors. It casts a generous, even glow across stone, timber and concrete façades, and is equally at home in entrances, hallways, stairways, corridors, kitchens and bathrooms, and even the smallest hideaway in need of light. It works as a standalone piece and when arranged in rows.

The lamp series was originally produced by Norwegian lighting firm Sønnico under the designation S/2015. Northern's relaunch preserves the silhouette and spirit of Dahl's original, updated for contemporary use. Hall is rated IP65 and fitted with dimmable LED. The versatile wall bracket allows the lamp to be mounted vertically or horizontally.

A Norwegian design icon, finally home again.

Award-winning designer Birger Dahl (1916–1998) was a pioneer of contemporary Scandinavian lighting. The mid-century years were a formative period of his work, when he forged his signature streamlined style and established a new vision of lighting design.

Dahl's career began when he became head of design at Norwegian electronics firm Sønnico and created the award-winning Dokka pendant lamp, the first lamp in Norway to receive a Gold Medal at the prestigious Triennale di Milano, which brought Norwegian lighting under the international spotlight. While acclaimed for his lighting designs, Dahl is also considered one of Norway's leading post-war interior architects. Strict geometric shapes, such as circles, cones and cylinders, were the building blocks of his design vocabulary, which he softened with gentle contours.

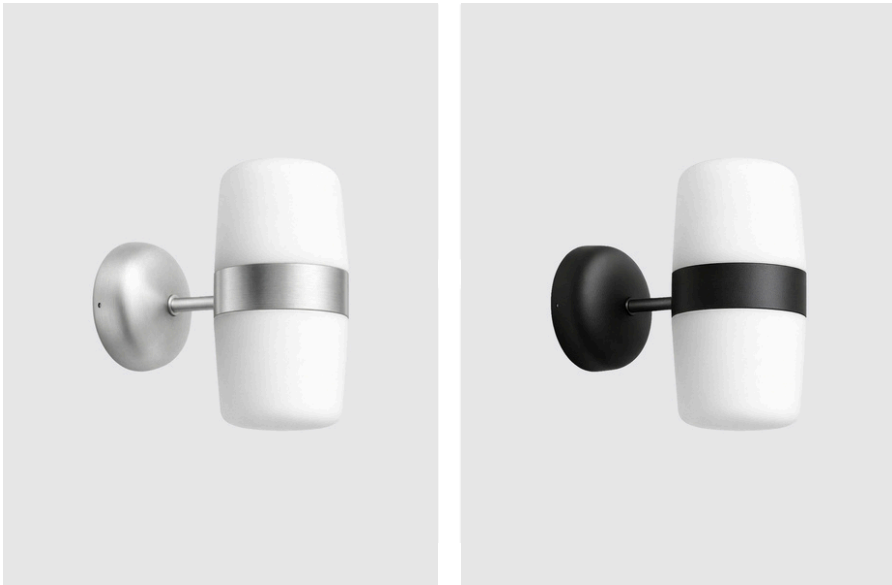

He emphasised the purity of form, highlighting the shape of the object rather than hiding it behind decorative details or layers of ornamentation. Sensibilities like these explain why his work still appears modern today, and why lighting designs such as Dokka, Birdy, Dahl and Hall remain so compatible with the interiors of our time.
